Why is this course needed?

CELET is proud to sponsor this important training for the Mason City Police Department in Mason City, IA on October 12, 2015.

Law Enforcement officer's encounters with dogs and other animals are generating more and more media attention and use of force against animals is being questioned. Proper training will both prepare officers for these encounters and reduce criticism when force has to be used.

This class will provide officers with a better perspective on canine encounters. The class will teach officers how to recognize canine aggression and interpret body language. Officers will learn defensive tactics and how to use less-lethal techniques in controlling canine encounters. Specific topics that will be addressed in the class include:

- Facts and statistics about dogs
- Problems for officers and their canine encounters
- Types of dog body language
- Contributing factors in why dogs bite
- How to handle your encounters with dogs
- Benefits about report writing with dogs
- Use of force continuum and policies on the use of force
- Criteria and techniques, distractions and less-lethal weapons
- Defensive stance, tactics, training, target areas and vital points

Course Instructor:

This class will be instructed by Jim Osorio with CELET. Jim is regarded as one of the foremost experts on canine encounters and less-lethal technology.

He has over 34 years of experience in public safety and has trained officers throughout the United States. He has experience as a law enforcement officer, certified animal control officer, animal cruelty investigator, volunteer firefighter and emergency medical technician.

He has written several articles and two books, "Surviving the Canine Encounter" and "A Guidebook to Investigating Animal Cruelty".

He has also testified as an expert witness for various cities, counties, state and federal agencies.
